WOMEN IN THE REVOLUTION

Submitted by Village of Richfield Springs Historian Harriett Geywits

There were many female patriots, most having no mention in the pages of our history. There were well over five thousand loyal women who have been acknowledged however, as contributing to the success of the Revolution and thousands more who supported the cause by managing homesteads and families while their men were in battle.

Many who were followers of their husbands were called simply, camp followers. These ladies took care of the cooking and foraging for food as well as doing the washing, mending, performing nursing services and anything else that they were called upon to do. They only had access to the clothing that could be carried which was, for most women, a chemises, an elbow fitted bodice, a skirt, apron and cap, all of which had to be carried in a knapsack.

One such camp follower was Mary Ludwig Hays, better known as Molly Pitcher, who earned honor at the Battle of Monmouth, New Jersey in 1778. This was one of the largest and most significant battles of the Revolution that occurred on a brutal, extremely hot, day in June. She brought water from a local well to the soldiers and when her husband was wounded, she took over his artillery piece, firing at the oncoming British.

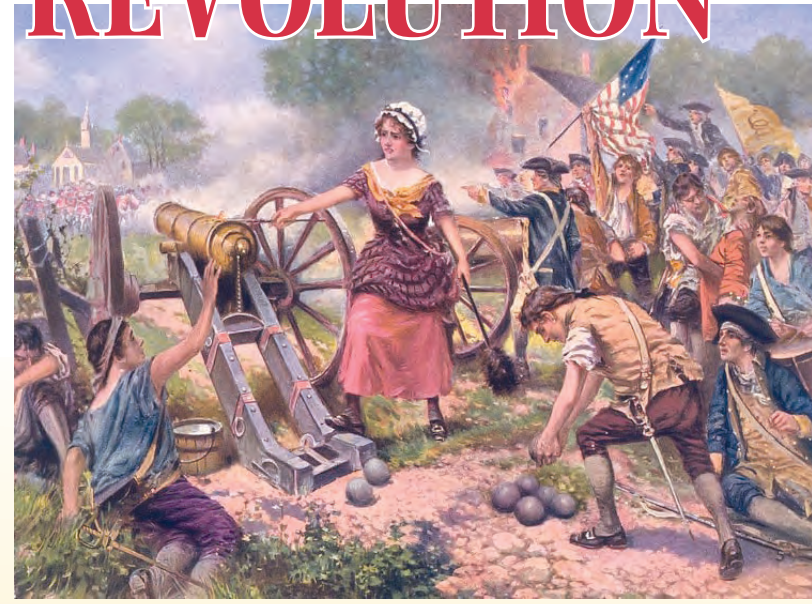

Similarly, Margaret Corbin was severely wounded during the assault on Fort Mifflin in November 1776 after providing sustenance to the soldiers near her husband who had taken over as a gunner. When he was killed, Margaret, known as Captain Molly, did not take time to mourn but continued firing the cannon alone until she was wounded. She was left for dead alongside her husband, until she was found and received a physician's help. She lived, although her wounds left her permanently disabled without the use of her left arm for the rest of her life. She was the first American female to receive a soldier's lifetime pension after the war.

Loyalty to the cause was shown in many ways, reaching all races and ages. Phyllis Wheatley was an enslaved African American living in Boston who took to writing poetry, becoming one of the first published female authors in America and the first African American woman to be published. Her 1773 collection of Poems on Various Subjects, Religious and Moral, was popular on both sides of the Atlantic, focusing on patriotism and human rights. Wheatley obtained her freedom when her master died in 1778.

Sybil Ludington, a New York State teenager, turned out to be the female equivalent of Paul Revere. In April 1777, she rode, covering a forty-mile route in a driving rainstorm, through Putnam and Dutchess counties, to rouse local militia to fight a British force that had attacked in nearby Danbury, Connecticut.

Historians say that the story of Betsy Ross is just that - a story. The claim that she sewed the first American flag, didn't surface until the Centennial in 1876 and was promoted by her grandson, William Canby.

Long before it was thought that women were capable of doing so, Deborah Sampson from Uxbridge, Massachusetts proved otherwise. She fought under the alias of Robert Shurtliff, the name of her deceased brother, in the light infantry company of the Fourth Massachusetts Regiment. She mustered into the service in the spring of 1782 and saw action in Westchester County, New York where she was wounded. Not wanting her identity to be revealed during medical care, she permitted the doctor to treat her head wound and then slipped away unnoticed where she extracted one of the bullets from her thigh with a penknife and sewing needle. Her identity was finally revealed during the summer of 1783 when she contracted a fever while on duty in Philadelphia. The physician who treated her kept her secret and cared for her. She was given an honorable discharge from the army. She later married and had three children. To help make ends meet, she often gave public lectures about her wartime service. She continually petitioned the state and federal governments for her service pensions which, by the time of her death in 1827, she had finally received.

Margaret "Kate" Moore Barry became known as the heroine of the Battle of Cowpens. She volunteered as a scout for the American forces. She was familiar with every trail and shortcut around her plantation in South Carolina and was an excellent horsewoman. The Battle of Cowpens took place on January 17, 1781. Kate was instrumental in rounding up militia to support the Continental troops.

The wives of the Generals did not think themselves too important to attend to their husbands during battle. It was said of Martha Washington: "I never in my life knew a woman so busy from early morning until late at night as Lady Washington, providing comfort for the sick soldiers."

Lucy Flucker Knox was known as Lady Know by the soldiers. She was said to be aloof but was kind and generous, never hesitating to share her and her husband Henry's food and caring for the sick and injured. She gave up her entire Loyalist family, never seeing them again, to marry the man she had loved since she was fourteen years old. She arrived at camp at Valley Forge with their two-year old daughter to provide what help she could.

Mercy Otis Warren became known as the 'Conscience of the American Revolution'. She was an influential writer and the first woman playwright who sympathized with the call for revolution. She recognized the social differences between men and women and the need for education of women, working for equal respect and equal rights for women regardless of their station in life.

Becoming disenchanted with her homeland, Esther DeBerdt Reed supported her husband and the American cause by establishing, along with Sarah Franklin Bache, daughter of Benjamin Franklin, 'The Ladies of Philadelphia', an organization that raised an enormous sum for the troops by going door to door asking for donations. They collected over $300,000, an unbelievable sum, which was offered to General Washington for use of the army. He suggested that the best use would be clothing for the troops. With that in mind, the group bought linen with the money and made over two thousand shirts for the troops, adding the name of the seamstress to each one as a show of support.

There were many other women who contributed, each in her own way, to the trials and triumphs of the Revolutionary War. This patriotic passion by women was to be shown again and again throughout the years as our nation continued to grow.

Houseplant Tip

It's important to watch houseplants closely. According to gardenguides.com, an online gardening resource, you should inspect plants regularly for yellowing or discolored leaves. This condition is usually caused by overwatering, but can also be the result of insects. Deformed plants and sticky deposits on leaves and stems can be caused by insects as well.
